David: Epic day
me: how so?
David: just watching the lulzsec shinnanigans while participating in heated bitcoin debates David: and it all fits the overall narrative so fucking well me: what are they doing now?
David: From what I've seen... trolled the hell out of the geek community globally
David: and did something with some company that sells monitoring software tos ome governments or somesuch David: nice touch, tossing in a politically relevant hack into the see of existential lulz-seeking David: and there's a thread on somethingawful trying to make sense of it all David: and the cognitive dissonance is making their heads explode me: right, Unveillance me: we have those e-mails me: which contained some bits and pieces on Endgame Systems me: which we're trying to expose me: Google Endgame Systems me: you'll see something amusing me: aside from the fact that Endgame has been keeping their own site offline David: nice
David: can't wait
David: HOLY SHIT - just found a great new addition to my 'anthropology of internet culture' - David: someone decided to take a crack at defining 'sperg'
David: "I've come to understand that it has the more general meaning "to critically examine something I, for whatever reason, don't want to be examined critically.""
David: I think that's a brilliant observation, and will incorprate it.
David: (basically, accusing someone of sperging is a more acceptable form of butthurt ragequiting)
me: oic David: (it all relates to Socrates. Always ;)) me: come hang out in irc.project-pm.org me: I'm gonna play some TF2, later
